Eulogy (of Kevin)

Samuel Bradshaw – Period 1

Kevin MacDougall was a good husband and father, greatly loved by his faithful wife Lillian and his two children, Bobby and Susan, who mourned deeply his passing. His father was a colonel in the army; his mother laid down her life in bringing him into the world. Kevin taught as a respectable schoolteacher. He loved books and music; he always favored a simple life at home with his family. Kevin was a serious man and spent as much time as he could fulfilling his responsibilities of raising his children and caring for his wife. He disliked the violence presented by battles and warfare. Nevertheless, he gave his last years serving his country as a Confederate soldier and died fighting, a patriot to the cause of the Confederacy. His last words on the battlefield, “Oh my God, have mercy on me” were granted – he was carried back to his loved ones before his pain-wracked body expired. May he ever receive his eternal reward in paradise as he leaves this mortal world of pain and heartache behind.
