

Samuel Bradshaw

Mr. Edward Pate

English IV

18 October 2007

A Beginner's Guide to Nick

Nicholas Barrett Medeiros, of anonymous fame, is usually himself. Unique is he – witty and brave. When asked what his favorite food is, he replied “the kind that you eat.” This is Nick’s typical witty reply. However, he stands up sincerely and bravely for any cause that he believes in, or for any person who needs help. This personality requires a deeper analysis. In a series of interviews, I have questioned Nick extensively. This is my report: Nick has strong opinions about cars, technology, and, of course, ice cream.

Nick Medeiros likes several cars – but he is adamant about one thing in particular: it must work. He only likes a car that works – that’s the only car he’d ever be seen driving in. This is certainly an important technical specification to consider when in search of a car. Nick explains that that’s all he really needs; a fancy car is a luxury. If he could have any car, he would like to have either the one in Back to the Future, so that he can visit the twenty- or thirty-year-old Nick, or a magic school bus because it’s a transformer. His car would be painted black, for that is his favorite color, and his license plate would somehow contain his favorite word, which is “Bow-chicka-bow-wow.”

It is clear that Nick likes computers. His favorite magazine is Tiger Direct, which involves computers. Both his favorite job and his fantasy career involve computers. He wants to be a computer repair person. Nick is well on his way – he currently attends Locklin Tech to learn how to fix computers. His dream is to work his way up in the ranks from computer repair person to owner of Microsoft. Perhaps – and this is just speculation on my part – perhaps he wants to be the owner of Microsoft for more reasons than computers. I heard from a reliable source that Nick wants to own Microsoft so that he could get rich, get free stuff, and tell people what to do.

Whatever his reasons, I'm sure they are honorable.

Nick has strong opinions about his ice cream. "Cookies and Cream is my favorite," says he, "but if I could have any flavor, I would have 'Double Cookies and Cream.'" One might inquire as to why Nick likes Cookies and Cream so much. In response to these inquisitive people, Nick replies "because it tastes good, and I like Oreos." His fantasy date is to go to Wal-mart and obtain some of this ice cream, in hopes that his date may also like it. This would undoubtedly make the girls he dates like him even more. Nick would never date someone twice who doesn't like Cookies and Cream.

After reading this, perhaps you can get a picture of who Nick is – or at least a glimpse into his personality. We've examined his taste in cars. We've taken apart his technical goals and skills. And, for the final determination of Nick's personality, we have scooped into his ice cream preferences. Nick Medeiros will, without a doubt, go far in life. He is well on his way to his career goals, and he is ready for life after high school.